Pruning Terms Explained

- Formative – to train a young tree through pruning, this practice is to encourage its species potential form and structure and is tailored directly to the species of tree being cared for as every species has an ideal habit.
- Corrective – to perform reduction pruning within the canopy to improve the trees branch structure and correct poor crown development
- Form – to prune the tree for aesthetics, usually pertaining to the canopies outline (be it regular or undulating) according to species and the physical limitations of the tree.
- Structure - removing or reducing limbs which are adversely affecting the stability of the tree or the limb itself, the result being a tree with less distal weight acting on limb/stem unions reducing failure potential.
- Retrenchment – to perform an overall canopy reduction to encourage proximal (nearer the centre of the tree) growth – used to re-invigorate and help to stabilize older trees in decline.
- Clearance – to reduce either individual limbs/branches or the entire canopy due to space limitations as dictated by either physical structures or other plants.

Follow up care should be considered after a tree has been pruned as it will react to its biomass being reduced; the frequency depends on species, age and type of pruning implemented.
